

About Hate

Scolding is the act of reprimanding or criticizing someone in a harsh or angry manner. It is often done in response to behavior that is seen as inappropriate or unacceptable. Scolding can be done in a variety of ways, such as through verbal criticism, facial expressions, or body language. It is important to remember that scolding is not a constructive or effective way to communicate or address problems, and that it can be damaging to relationships and to the well-being of the person being scolded
